Continuation of 3. NOTE: The amendments to at least claim 13 introduce a narrowing limitation, such that previously, shielding of even a small portion of the variable display, such as only on symbol positions was sufficient to anticipate the claims, however, the amendment introduces a narrowing limitation that requires the entire variable display to be shielded, which can be seen as a narrowing (i.e. changing of scope) limitation that requires at least a new consideration. Additionally, the amendment introduces a new claim (# 17) without canceling the same number of finally rejected claims. Therefore, the amendment will not be entered.

Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: At least the reasons stated in section 3 above (i.e. the narrowing limitation and newly added claim). See also attached "Detailed Action" for a response to the Double Patenting issue.

Continuation of 5 Other: The Applicant fails to specifically point out how new claim 17 overcomes the prior art or is novel over the prior art cited in the previous office action. Merely stating that it "includes features not shown in the applied art" is insufficient. See 37 CFR 1.111(c), which states "the applicant or patent owner must clearly point out the patentable novelty which he or she thinks the claims present in view of the state of the art disclosed by the references cited or the objects made" which includes newly presented claims. DETAILED ACTION

Response to Double Patenting Issue

The Applicant argues the fact that the Examiner does set forth a proper double patenting rejection, and that the Office fails to establish a prima facie case of obviousness-type double patenting because of the deficiencies within the rejection. The Examiner respectfully disagrees. According to the Applicant, two points should be made clear, including (a) the differences between the inventions defined in the conflicting claims, and (b) the reasons why a person of ordinary skill in the art would conclude the invention defined in the claim in issue is obvious variation of the invention defined in a claim in the patent. For clarification, both of the conflicting sets of claims are co-pending applications, neither is yet a patent. Regardless, the Examiner maintains that these two points of interest were clearly set forth in the Final Office action dated September 21, 2006. The Examiner discussed the differences between the inventions defined in the conflicting claims via discussing how one skilled in the art is capable of creating a variation of the claimed invention of copending application 10/644,955 by merely changing the claim language such that any "device" language be changed to a "means for" phrasing to invoke 35 U.S.C. 112, 6th paragraph. This creates a claimed invention that includes all of the same features, with specific functional language. This can be seen as an obvious variant to that of co-pending application 10/644,955, which is considered a broader form of the same claimed invention. The Examiner's "reasons" why a person of ordinary skill in the art would conclude the invention defined in the claims was discussed as each "means" to carry out a process needs a device to carry out that process (in a gaming machine environment), thus, it would have been obvious to modify claim language as discussed above to create an obvious variant. Therefore, it is submitted that the provisionally obviousness-type double patenting rejection was made proper and is maintained herein.
